

The Safe Food Enforcement, Assessment, Standards and Targeting Act (Safe FEAST Act)

Foreign Suppliers Quality Assurance Program

All imported goods coming into the United States must adhere to the same safety and quality standards as set by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA).

FDA Statutory Recall Authority

For the first time, FDA granted statutory recall authority to pull adulterated products from the food supply. FDA also given access to food safety records during emergencies and ability deny importation of goods if strict food safety standards are not met.

Mandatory Food Risk Assessment and Preventative Controls Plan

Requires domestic and foreign food companies selling food in U.S. to conduct a food safety risk analysis that identifies potential sources of contamination, outlines appropriate food safety controls, and documents in food safety plan subject to FDA review, to address the risks of food-borne contamination.

Standards for the Safety of Fruits and Vegetables

To minimize the risk of adverse health consequences, establishes tough new standards for high-risk fruits and vegetables, as well as puts into place Guidelines for Good Agricultural Practices for all produce.
